Enjoy Scotland's outdoors responsibly

- take responsibility for your own actions
- respect the interests of other people
- care for the environment.

IOL announce a new series of workshops to help outdoor professionals enjoy Scotland's outdoors responsibly.

Leave No Trace is an Outdoor Ethic approach and programme designed to promote and inspire responsible outdoor recreation through education, research and partnerships.

Purpose

The workshops will be delivered to further explore the Leave No Trace principles and how they tie into the Scottish Outdoor Access Code (The Code).

Who are the workshops for?

The workshops are suitable for anyone working in the world of outdoor learning, outdoor education or adventure activities. They may also be relevant for some rangers and outdoor access officers.

Content

Workshop participants will be expected to commit to a full day of training (9.00am - 5.00pm) which will further explore the Leave No Trace principles which are as follows:

- Plan Ahead and Prepare
- Dispose of Waste Properly
- Minimise Campfire Impacts
- Be Considerate of Other Visitors
- Travel and Camp on Durable Surfaces
- Leave What You Find
- Respect Wildlife

Workshop participants will receive a certificate from The Leave No Trace Center for Outdoor Ethics. The workshop is also a recognised Continuing Professional Development module of the IOL Professional Accreditation programme.

Organisers

The workshops are supported by Scottish Natural Heritage and organised by the Institute for Outdoor Learning (IOL) who are a partner organisation of the Leave No Trace Center for Outdoor Ethics. The workshop leader will be Myles Farnbank.
